Born in Hong Kong and then moved to Canada in the 80s, Eric received his Bachelor degree with a specialised honour in Fine Arts from York University (Ontario, Canada) in 1997. In 2003, he obtained his Master degree in Design Management from The Hong Kong Polytechnic University. Eric has explored his art with different mediums such as oil painting, watercolors, photography, sculpting, printmaking, Chinese ink painting and Chinese calligraphy. Born into the Eastern culture, but raised in a Western environment, his creative artworks also reflect this mixed cultural influence and has been collected by overseas organisations and collectors alike. His artworks produced in Hong Kong have continued this artistic conception. By using Chinese ink painting skills to represent the Yin and the Yang, two opposing principles in nature, Eric draws on his understandings of Chinese philosophy together with modern art and Chinese calligraphy and reflects them with his own unique style and interpretations.

This programme is designed not only to teach Chinese Ink Art but also to inspire a deep respect and understanding of cultural arts, encouraging students to explore and develop their own creative expressions within this venerable artistic tradition.

the fact that the  $\mathbb{R}^n$ -valued function  $\mathbf{f}$  is continuous at  $\mathbf{a}$  if and only if each of its components  $f_i$  is continuous at  $\mathbf{a}$ . This is a useful result because it allows us to reduce the study of the continuity of a vector-valued function to the study of the continuity of its components.

Another important result is the Intermediate Value Theorem for vector-valued functions. It states that if  $\mathbf{f}$  is a continuous function from a closed interval  $[a, b]$  to  $\mathbb{R}^n$ , then the image of  $[a, b]$  under  $\mathbf{f}$  is a connected subset of  $\mathbb{R}^n$ . This is a generalization of the Intermediate Value Theorem for real-valued functions.

Finally, we mention the concept of a path in  $\mathbb{R}^n$ . A path is a continuous function  $\mathbf{f}$  from a closed interval  $[a, b]$  to  $\mathbb{R}^n$ . The image of  $[a, b]$  under  $\mathbf{f}$  is called the path of  $\mathbf{f}$ . Paths are important in many areas of mathematics, including physics and geometry.

In conclusion, the study of vector-valued functions is a rich and interesting area of mathematics. It provides a natural way to generalize the concepts of continuity and the Intermediate Value Theorem to higher dimensions. It also has many applications in other areas of mathematics and science.

12. Insurance Coverage

- 12.1 AISL Outdoor and its Operations Providers are responsible for maintaining liability insurance coverage. This specific third-party risk insurance is structured to offer compensation in the event of financial losses stemming from unfortunate incidents involving the death or bodily injury of a third party. These incidents are directly related to shared areas and facilities within the premises, including but not limited to elevators, staircases, fire service installations, and other communal amenities.
- 12.2 We strongly recommend that our participants purchase their own personal travel or personal injury insurance coverage at their own expense. This proactive step is instrumental in ensuring comprehensive protection for their individual interests and overall well-being during their engagement with our services.
- 12.3 This supplementary insurance coverage serves as an additional layer of security and offers a safeguard against unforeseen circumstances and provides a vital safety net for our participants.
